The annual report by the independent U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) on Friday said it would visit India next month to closely scrutinize the religious freedom and restrictions in the country.

The report by the US congressional panel while named 13 countries as serious violators of religious freedom, said India's case is 'pending' and will be examined by a team of religious analysts visiting the country in June.

"The Commission is planning to travel to India for the first time in June 2009. Therefore the Commission will release its report on India during this summer," the report said.
